

Olden Times

no.203.078

THE WORLDS OLDEST NEWSPAPER

- since 1879 -

Winners Adjust More Than Their Pajama Pants

League Holds Breath As Coach Delays Getting Off Ass

The 2K8 season is off to a rough start for University of North Carolina coach Ron Josanova. One can only assume that his lack of competitive fire stems from the fact he has yet to buy the game. Asked numerous times why he can't organize a simple trip to Best Buy, Ron refrained from comment. It is rumored that he is often rendered financially helpless when his wife is in possession of the couple's lone ATM card.

Coach Josanova's coaching peers did not seem surprised by his latest exercise in futility. "Ron, while a good friend, has shown on several occasions that he can be a non-competitor," said Tennessee coach Steve Katz.

Sources confirmed that Josanova missed the KU game at Lottie's two weeks ago because his wife was at the store getting him lunch. The news was not well received by UCLA coach Ryan Dardis, "Wait, isn't he a grown man? Since when does a 31 year-old male not watch his squad play because his wife is at the grocery store?"

It is dually noted that Coach Josanova secured the game "Gears of War" from the local Best Buy recently with little to no problem. His wife, Kaitlin, confirmed that he regularly engages in combat into the wee hours of a typical worknight.

Bruins Coach Lights Fire, Gets Smoked

Bruins coach Ryan Dardis gave new meaning to the phrase "pregame warmup" when he flipped the switch to ignite the gas fireplace in his luxury Wicker Park condominium just prior to his scheduled game against the Kansas Jayhawks Thursday night. Even going out of his way in a thinly veiled attempt to intimidate opposing coach Jon Heinz he is said to have uttered "I'm lighting my fire....cause when I kick your @ss I want it to be done by firelight."

After a highly competitive first half that saw the Bruins claw to within two points of the Jayhawks the game slipped away after a game ending 22-3 Kansas run. Many in the Los Angeles sports media were quick to question the coach's decision to compete in such an important tilt in a pavilion lit only by incandescent gas. Some even went as far as to suggest that the fossil fuel used to heat the porcelain logs in his glass fireplace would have been better used to light a competitive fire within his players.